

The Half Sider Parakeet

By Jackie

January 28, 2016

A Beautiful Mistake

When you go to the pet store, and go to the bird section, you'll see parakeets (parakeets are small parrots). As you look at them, you see that they are different colors.

Parakeets can vary to sunny yellow and grass green or sky blue and Snow White. But there is an extraordinary occurrence that happens to parakeets. You won't believe your eyes.

Meet Twinzy

People discovered a new color variation of a parakeet: a half Sider parakeet. His name is Twinzy. If you see Twinzy from a side angle, he appears to be a normal parakeet color variation. If he turns when you aren't looking, he's a different color variation. You might think he's a different bird, but wait till you see him in a front angle. Something that would take your breath away. He is both color variations! A line in the middle divides the variations.

This bird is actually two beings fused together. It happens when two embryos fuse together at an early stage.

Meet Houdini

People discovered a new half Sider named Houdini. He's not only two color variations, he's also half male , half female!

You can find Twinzy at Rudy's pet supply in Oklahoma City.

This bird, a divided beauty, will always be a phenomenon in nature.

1. Embryo: the stage that a being that is still forming inside an egg.

